

My little sister is great, she is kind and always there when I need her to be. But she can also be annoying and can get on my last nerve. I want to tell you about what she looks like, her personality, her favourite things and what's it like living with her.

Annie (my little sister) has got a nice shade of brown eyes and if you look closer you can see little specks of light green. Her skin is more tan than any other person in my household and her cheeks always have a rosy colour to them. Her hair goes to just below her shoulders and is dark brown with light brown on top with blonde streaks and is always soft.

Annie's personality is full of different things. She can manage to always put a smile on my face when I need one. She is really caring and sweet to people and sometimes helping people with things. The downside is she can get quite bossy and sometimes decides it's fun to get on my very last nerve, which is not a fun thing to do, for me that is.

Her favourite things are that she loves food, when she comes home from school she will make a sandwich or cook spaghetti. Annie has her own music taste that goes from country to pop and even some music I listen to. She absolutely loves to sleep in on school days mostly, it's always a difficult task to wake her up in the morning and to get her out of bed.

Living with Annie can be fun at times, sometimes we will be in the same room and she won't even notice me. We like to joke about things and laugh loudly, then my oldest sister will tell us to shut up. We do have our ups and downs, but what siblings don't. Me and her get along with most things but not all the time.

No matter what I would always be there to look after my sister, even if she doesn't notice I will always care for my sister.

Written by Bridget Smith